Ernest Hemingway

Ernest Miller Hemingway (July 21, 1899 – July 2, 1961) was an American journalist and author. He was born in Oak Park, Illinois and began his career as a journalist writing for a newspaper in Kansas City at the age of seventeen.

After serving in a volunteer ambulance unit for the Italian government during World War I (and being severely wounded and subsequently decorated by the Italian government), he returned to journalism writing for several American and Canadian newspapers. He used his career as a journalist as grist for his literary mill, writing short stories, novels and non-fiction pieces, culminating in his most ambitious novel For Whom the Bell Tolls, inspired by his coverage of the Spanish Civil War.

A great sportsman, Hemingway's protagonists were often sportsmen and hunters as well as soldiers. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1954.

Did You Know?
• According to his biographer, Hemingway drank absinthe, whiskey, vodka, wine, gin, tequila, and champagne—for breakfast!—every day. That was just the start. He never got hung over, either.
• He was an avid hunter by age three. As a toddler, he shot and killed a porcupine, which his father then made him eat. Legend has it that he complained that the quills “hidied”.
• Until the age of four, his mother dressed him in long, frilly pink gowns with lace bonnets, grew his hair as long as his sister’s, and encouraged him to play with teacups, sewing kits, and dolls.
• He wrote while standing for most of his career.
• Hemingway’s first job after returning home from the First World War was as a freelance, staff writer, and foreign correspondent for the Toronto Daily Star. It was a position he kept for four years, until 1924.
• Some of the lingering effects of several serious injuries, alcoholism, mild dementia, and depression led to his suicide in 1961 in Ketchum, Idaho a few weeks shy of his sixty-second birthday.

Serenity from Strength

Santiago suffers greatly in catching and trying to preserve his prize on his way back home. Though he fails, he does not seem to be angry or bitter at the loss and the agony that went with it. In fact, he takes his streak of “bad luck” with apparent indifference and is even sanguine about the loss of Manolin as a partner. Though he may have suffered permanent injuries that could hamper his ability to fish — may even have suffered an ultimately fatal injury — he never once questions whether or not he should continue. From whence comes this strength?

Rewrite Santiago’s battles with the sharks, giving him more self-doubt (engendered by a belief in his bad luck) as he fights trying to keep the marlin intact.

Hero

Though no one mentions it, by the end of the tale the villagers’ attitude indicates that they no longer believe the old man is unlucky. True, he could not keep his catch from the sharks, but he did land the biggest fish any of them had ever seen or heard of.

Write a brief account of the first day he and Manolin set out to fish after the events of the story. Try to mirror flow of the story’s beginning—evening through to morning—showing how the conversation and attitudes may have changed.

Comprehension Quiz

Answer each question in a complete sentence.

1. What kind of unlucky is Santiago deemed to be?

2. Where did Santiago get the paper?

3. Where and when did Santiago see lions?

4. How much work did the old man let the current do as he rowed out in the morning?

5. Why did Santiago not fish the deep wells that first day?

6. What happened after Santiago and Manolin had once caught and killed a female of a pair of marlins?

7. Why didn’t Santiago think people ashore could see signs of a hurricane days before it would strike?

2. Heroism: Emerging unbowed from soul-wrenching hardships

3. Pride: Source of strength or coiled Lee’s coat

4. Success measured by victory, not by quantity

Is Santiago meant to be a symbol figure, or does the symbol mean to something else?
Section Five

(From the paragraph that starts with "He did not remember when he had..." to the paragraph that starts with "He’s headed north,” the old man said.)

After You Read

Answer each question with a complete sentence.

1. When did Santiago first start to talk to himself when he was alone? Why do you think he did this?

2. How did Santiago know that the fish was a marlin when it first began to nibble on the line?

3. Why did Santiago think the marlin might have abandoned the line before being hooked?

4. Why did Santiago not say that the marlin would swallow the hook?

5. Why did Santiago not tie off the line once the marlin was hooked?

6. What did Santiago remind himself of during the night?

Journaling Prompt

Write a brief extension to this part where the marlin dives down and before he stops doing so, Santiago runs out of extra line. What do you think Santiago should do in this situation? What might he have done to prevent this?
